

Midweek Bible Study for 2016

The Gospel Of Matthew

“A brilliant halo of white light envelops the walls of Herod’s temple. The white limestone blocks gleam as the edges of the light slips around them. Travelers camping on the Mount of Olives gaze at the temple’s beauty. As the sun descends, the color of the heavens paints the temple yellow, then red, then purple, until finally heaven and earth meld in darkness. The great glorious building that seemed so permanent had disappeared. When Jesus taught in Galilee, “the kingdom of heaven is near,” and at the temple, “not one stone will be left upon another,” it must have seemed like a dream to his disciples. The ways of this world and its glory must have seemed permanent. And yet, as Jesus preached, the sun was setting on the old ways because God had promised He would come to reign. In the Gospel according to Matthew, Jesus reveals the glorious appearing of the kingdom of heaven.” (The Lutheran Study Bible, Page 1575.)
